

NEW ABSTRACT

A gas discharge lamp for the wavelength range of extreme ultraviolet radiation and/or soft X-ray radiation has at least two electrodes for providing a radiation-emitting plasma in the intervening discharge space. One of the electrodes has a continuous opening to an adjoining outer region where charge carriers can be generated which can be transported through the opening into the discharge space. The electrode opening narrows in the direction of the outer region.